CURING A FLIRT.

"What a foolish little woman! My betrothed wife ought to have more faith in me than to become fealous every time I happen to look at a pretty face."

"Jealous, Eric Thorne!" echoed Miss Beauford, angrily. "You are very much mistaken if you think I would stoop to jealousy, but when you so far forget yourself as to flirt outrageously with every handsome woman who crosses your path it is time that I should "Really! Then I presume that I have orders not to speak to Mrs. Gresham when I meet her, notwithstanding the fact that she is an old flame of mine?"

"If you are desirous of re-establishing your friendship or love for Mrs. Gresham I will not stand in your way. You are at liberty henceforth and forever to please yourself. Here is your over to please yourself. Here is your ring."

"You don't mean to say, Nell, that you wish to break our engagement on account of a trifling misunderstanding?"

"I wish you to distinctly understand that I release you from fetters that evidently gall you."

As Eric Thorne did not attempt to take the ring from angry little Miss Beautord, she sent it spinning across the plazza.

With a smothered exclamation ho picked it up, thrust it into his pocket, and strode away in a towering rage.

"An old flame of his, am I?" queried An old flame of his, am 1?" queried Mrs. Gresham, as she slowly rose from the lounge on which she had been reclining. This lounge stood directly under the window outside of which Capt. Thorne and his affianced had stood to settle their dispute; thus Mrs. Gresham had been an unintentional listener. "His old flame! Nell bowed.
"You will forgive me for intruding upon you when I confess that I acci-dentally overheard your conversation a few minutes since with Eric Thorne!" "Indeed!" replied Miss Beauford,

"I prefer to leave Miss Beauford's name out of the present discussion," he answered, constrainedly. The widow looked at him keenly for a moment or two and then began to play with the ring upon her finger. "One thing I promise: I will renounce forever all other women on the day you give me permission to take that ring from your finger and put another in its place."

Mrs. Gresham suddenly became very distant and coy. It took an immense

Of course, Captain Thorne consented to all her capricious whims. Then the widow kissed him and begged him to keep the affair a secret until they The next night at the appointed hour

The next night at the appointed hour —10 o'clock—Capt. Thorne awaited his lady-love, who was rather tardy. Four handsome bay horses champed their bits and pawed the ground, impatient to start. At last he saw her approaching. The tall, stately figure was enveloped in a dark clock, her head shrouded monstrous hood and veil, e went forward to meet her, and percoiving that she was violently agita-ted, whispered words of encouragement as he assisted her into the carriage, but as he assisted her into the carriage, our although she gently pressed the hand that held her own, he could not induce her to speak a word during the drive. "Here we are!" he exclaimed, as the carriage finally stopped. "In a few minutes you will be my own."

Then with a caress—the last, ex-plained, that he should ever give to Edith Gresham—he led her into the brilliantly lighted drawing room, where the ceremony was to take place. About a dezen of their choicest friends, including Miss Beauford, were there to meet them.

Capt. Thorne started when he saw Nell, and changed color. though with an effort, he turned to his bride-elect.

But as the lady removed her hood and vell she disclosed to the gaze of the as-tonished assembly the features of Nora McGrath, his Irish laundress. The silence that ensued was broken by Miss McGrath:

"Well, thin, and what are yez waiting fer? Shure, and after staling me away from me home and frinds at this toime o' night ye'd betther be afther marry me, or I'll be getting a breach of prom-

"But, my good woman, where did you come from? How did you get here?"
demanded the captain in bewilderment. "How did I get here? Do ye mane to deny yer brung me here yersilf? Oh, ye villin!" "But where is Mrs. Gresham? What do you mean by this? Explain your-self, woman!"

The laugh at Captain Thorne's mortification was general; little Miss Beau-ford alone did not smile. "Misthress Gresham, is it? Shure, and I was forgitting entirely the little bit of paper she tould me to give yez when we wuz married." So saying Nora produced a note addressed to Captain Thorne, which read as follows:

My Dear Eric:—When you receive this I shall be many miles away from Newport, but that you may not be disappointed in our scheme for tomight I have revealled on Miss McGrath to take my place. I trust that she will make you a good wife. This little filtration has been very amusing to me and has made time pass very pleasantly for both of us. Of course you could not suppose that I would ever consent—in earnest—to become the wife of a common filtr. Yours, for auld lang syne.

"Nell," he said, "I have been a fool, and am rightly punished. But through all this nonsensical business I have never really forgotten you. In the presence of these our friends I ask your forgiveness. Impose upon me any pen-ance—only say you will eventually be-come my wife."

Before Nell, overwhelmed by the situation, could answer, Nora McGrath, now smiling broadly, broke in:

"And shure I always said yo'd come

"And shure I aways said you come to yer senses in toime, captain. Yer not such a fool as ye look, afther all. Now I'll be getting back home, if ye plaze, and you can settle matters wid the young lady afterwards."

Six months later Mrs. Gresham received a letter from Mrs. Thorne, once Helen Beauford, informing her that "Eric was so changed that he was quite a model husband—in fact, he was all that she could wish him to be; but for some reason he seemed to hate the name of Gresham."

LONDON, April 15 .- The Times to-day, commenting upon the settlement of the questions in dispute between Italy and the United States, says: "Upon a great Christian anniversary like Good Friday it is often difficult to find in the records of current events anything that very distinctly shows the influence of Christisnity upon international conduct.
